The Logic of Love

Part II: Faith

With an understanding of the Freewill Love Factor under our belts, we can now explore the special nature of spiritual faith. The material in Part II sorts through the differences between belief and knowledge as these terms are applied in a spiritual versus a secular context. It focuses on the implications of making a decision that is intended to be a life-long re-affirmation of belief. Additionally, Part II considers the propriety, when considering faith in God, of accepting the testimony of others (in contrast with relying on one's own thoughts and experiences). The last chapter is addressed to those who already have faith. It highlights the importance of progressively developing a love-motivated faith and speaks to the value of experiencing faith as a logical extension of love.
